Message from Bhante:

GIVING AND TRANSFERENCE OF MERITS

THE BUDDHIST PERSPECTIVE

Giving occupies a pre-eminent place in the network of Buddhist ethics or moral principles that govern an individual's conduct. In the performance of an act of giving, two persons - the giver or donor, and the receiver or beneficiary - and the thing being given or donation are involved. Giving (dāna) is defined as furnishing with something to any personality or personalities out of concern about his/their moral or spiritual achievement, and also providing something to a needy individual or group as assistance out of compassion. Thus giving is motivated either by worthiness of the recipient or recipients or by the observation of any individual's or a group of individuals' need.

The acts of caring, sharing and rendering service also come within the gamut of the concept of giving. The act of giving is listed as the first of many codes of moral conduct. Namely; it is the first in the list of Ten Perfections (dasa pāramitā), Ten Meritorious Deeds (dasa puññakiriya), Ten Royal Duties (dasa rājadhamma) and Four Ways of Showing Favour (cattāri samgahavatthu). In the Mangala Sutta it is mentioned as one of the thirty-eight blessings (mangala).

In Buddhism, different shades of its meaning is conveyed by words such as "generosity", "liberality", "gift" (cāga) and "letting go" or "giving up" or "renouncing" (pariccāga). Basically giving is twofold: the first is giving material things (āmisadāna) useful for one's daily life and the second is aiding others to achieve intellectual, moral and spiritual progress (dhammadāna). Out of these two forms of giving, the second is described as the better and the foremost. In categorizing these two types of giving, many collective words such as gift (cāga), giving up (pariccāga), encouragement (anuggaha), treatment (santhāra), treating the guests (ātittheyya) and offering (pūjā) are given in the Anguttaranikaya. In order to make one's act of giving more beneficial and meritorious, one's mind has to be pure and pleasant in the three instances of the performance of giving, namely; before the act of giving, at the time of the act and after the act.

Transference of Merits and its Importance

In Buddhist technique of training, 'giving' has been accorded the pride of place, apparently for two reasons. Firstly, it contributes to gradual eradication of craving, the first of the three roots of evil, which binds one to cyclic existence thereby subjecting one to suffering. The second reason is, by performing an act of giving with pure and pleasant mind, one acquires merit, which continues to assist one to lead a favourable quality life in one's future births. In addition, the merits that one acquires by performing meritorious deeds can be transferred to departed ones, who have been born in woeful states and are yearning for merits from the living for their well-being. It is considered as a form of expressing gratitude by the living to the departed in consideration of their relationship or their material and spiritual contributions when they were alive in the human world to upkeep the standard of those living relatives.

Merits will never exhaust by transference. The very thought of transferring merits for the good of the departed results in the increase of one's merits. From the time of the Buddha, transference of merits to the departed was a religious tradition accompanied with the act of giving. Even before the Buddha, the tradition was in vogue among the people of other faiths in different forms. Probably it is because of this reason that in the famous Tirokudda Sutta, this tradition is referred to as a Conventional ritual of kinsfolk (ñātidhamma). It is also said in the discourse that the departed ones, who are happy with the transference of merits to them; they share it; enjoy it and give thanks and express their gratitude to the living, saying: "Because of our relatives we are prosperous now. May they live long happily!"

Qing Ming Memorial Service at Ti-Sarana

Members and devotees of Ti-Sarana perform the act of transferring merits to the departed twice a day as a routine practice after the Pūjā Service. In addition, following the age-old Chinese tradition, the Qing Ming Memorial Service is held annually for seven days to transfer merits to the departed relatives and friends for their well-being.

This year, the service will commence on March 30th and continue until April 5th. During the period of the memorial service, on April 3rd, a dāna, or alms giving to the mahāsaṅgha will be held. Since this is a once-a-year opportunity, members and devotees are encouraged to join the evening service and the alms giving ceremony on the stipulated days and express their gratitude to their departed relatives and friends as a mark of grateful remembrance and for their happiness.

Qing Ming Memorial Service (30th Mar. 2011 to 5th Apr. 2011)

Every evening, starting from 30th Mar. 2011 (Wed.) to 5th Apr. 2011 (Tues.) we will perform the Memorial Service after the Pūjā Service. Gifts of essential requisites will be offered to our Bhantes. By making the effort to perform the Pūjā Service, coupled with the offerings of gifts to the Bhantes, merits are acquired which we can transfer to our departed family members, relatives and friends.

On 3rd Apr. 2011 (Sun.) a special Qing Ming Memorial Service will be observed to remember our departed relatives and friends. Venerables from other Buddhist organizations will be invited so that we can perform the Sanghika Dāna. This is a very special Sanghika Dāna. Offerings of food and essential requisites will be made to the venerables who represent the entire Saṅgha community – past, present and future. We will then share this very powerful meritorious deed with all our departed relatives and friends for their well-being.

Members and devotees are encouraged to participate in the memorial service, especially the Sanghika Dāna and share the merits acquired with the departed relatives and friends.

My present from Bhante!

I now know when and why Suttas are chanted and taught by the Buddha – they relate to incidents that took place during the Buddha's lifetime. Those who can spare a few hours on Sunday morning should attend our Dhamma Classes.

In December 2010, 7 children sat for their "O" Level examinations. During the month long school holidays in December 2010, some children took the opportunity to visit their family members and relatives, with some fortunate enough to be able to spend a few weeks with their loved ones.

The children have since gone back to school in January 2011 and settled back to their daily activities at MYC.
